The Polynesian.

Turning our attention, lastly, to the human race, we see that nations in the lowest stage of development are sometimes closely connected with the forests. In the colder lands, where the trees ordinarily bear no edible, or at least no well flavored or nourishing fruits, it is the game which chiefly furnishes the inhabitants with food and clothing; these races then appear chiefly as hunters, such as the aborigines of North America. In the torrid culture live principally upon the fruits of the trees | thing.' or the pith of the trunks, like some of the tribes of Brazil, some of the inhabitants of the Indian Archipelago, and several races of negroes. South America even affords an example of a race who, almost, like monkeys, live upon the trees; whose existence, in fact, is to a great extent bound to a certain specie of tree. These are the Guarauni, at the mouth of the Orinoco, who live by and upon the Mauritia plant. When the ground is flooded, mats woven from the leaf-stalks of those palms are suspended between the trunks; these mats are covered with clay, so that fires can be made upon them, and here the Guarauni sleep, and pass a great portion of their lives. The trunk furnishes a fecula; the juice, a palm wine; and the fruits are well flavored, mealy at first, and afterwards sweet. Nomadic races, on the other hand, generally avoid forests; extensive grazing plains, fertile valleys, or the slopes of mountains, affording rich pasture land, are the best fitted for the migratory life which they lead, and for the support of their domestic animals. As soon as a race rises to agriculture, it becomes hostile to the forests. The trees are in the way of the spade and plow, and the wood gives less booty than the field, the garden, or the vineyard. The forest, therefore, falls beneath the ax, fire consumes the fallen trunks and branches, and the ashes manure the soil, giving for some years an extraordinarily rich harvest, especially in the dense tropical primeval forests. When, after the lapse of some years, the fertility decreases, a new the forests. Sometimes the conflagration spreads | had), of belonging to the whole thirty-four, " befurther than was intended, and the destruction is sides the territories." thus increased. This is the course pursued by the peasants of Norway and Sweden, as also by the uninterrupted extension. With the increase of population this destruction of the forests is continued, for it brings with it increased consumption of the products of the forest; wood is required for houses, furniture, wagons, and other implements, for bridges, posts, for fences, fuel for cooking, and where the climate is cold, for warming the dwellings. The consumption of wood increases further with industry, with navigation, and trade. Mining operations require timber, both for the works and for fuel to smelt the metals and ores; artisans and manufacturers use large quantities of the products of forests; dams against rivers and seas require their share, but, above all, navigation. The trunks of millions of trees are used up in ships and masts, in order to connect the highlands and inland dishe is prepared to furnish Pilot and Navy Bread, Water Crackers tricts with the coasts, and the coasts with each other, even beyond the ocean. The Height of Impudence. We frequently hear of instances which seem for the time to reach the very summit of impudence. The last one that has come to our knowledge is the story told of a young Boston lawyer, who was standing at the door of an entry of lawyers' offices in Court Street, when a man and woman came along and inquired of him if he knew where Mr.

deficiency of timber-a deficiency which may readily become disastrous! Many public economists and philanthropists have assumed this to be the case, and many do still assume it; they depict the future destitution of timber in the darkest colors, they loudly complain of the felling of wood, and time the ruinous consequences, by limiting the free the danger which is feared of alteration of climate, by the diminution of forests in temperate countries,

I hope also to be able in some measure to scatter

And so he led the way up stairs to the office of Mr. H., which was in that entry, asked him if he might have the use of his front office for a few moments in order to marry a couple, and leave being readily granted, performed the ceremony, and received a fee of five dollars! An Irish Soldier's Dodge. A son of the Emerald Isle, but not himself green, was taken up (for he was at the time down) near a rebel encampment, not far from Manassas Junction. In a word, Pat was taking a quiet nap in the shade, and was aroused from his slumbers by a scouting party. He wore no special uniform of either army, but he looked more like a spy than an alligator, and on this was arrested. "Who are you !" "What is your name!" Where are you from !" were the first questions put to him by the armed party. Pat rubbed his eyes, scratched his head and answered:

" Needles and pins-needles and pins, When a man's married his trouble begins." "I have often wished there was not such a thing as a needle or a pin, when I have found them sticking in garments, in my shirt, on my pillow, in the chairs, on the door rugs, strewed over the floors and passages, and in the streets. I will venture to say that the quantity of pins and needles that have been brought into this territory has not done one-tenth part of the service they would if they had been properly taken care of and not wasted. People will hardly stoop down to pick up a needle or a pin, but they will go to the woods. Hence forests are more sparingly met stores and buy them. Ladies will take a dollar ivory comb, put it in water, and then comb a child's bair with it; it is never dry, the ivory softens, and the comb is used up in a very short time, when a good comb of that description ought Have not, then, our descendants to expect a great to last five years in a common family. Mothers have not learned that water will spoil an ivory comb. All over; you can pick up one wherever you go. Do we answer the creation in thus wasting, with a prodigal hand, the good things which our Heavenly Father has bestowed upon us? " A Thousand Dollar Hat.

The following story is told of a greedy minister in Western Massachusetts :- " John J. Arnold, an old bachelor, who died at Pittsfield many years ago, had made his will, giving a certain reverend gentleman in a country town where Mr. Arnold owned a farm, and had formerly resided, one thousand dollars, as his testimony of his grateful esteem and good will. During Mr Arnold's last illness, which lasted some months, he sent for his clerical friend, who came to visit him. Noticing that the reverend gentleman's hat was rather seedy, Mr. Arnold wrote an order for a hat and handed it to the minister, saying that he should be pleased to present him with a hat. The divine gratefully accepted the order. During that night Mr. Arnold had a fresh attack of his malady, and was supposed to be dying. When the minister was ready to go home it was announced that Mr. Arnold would not probably survive many hours. Determined to make the most of his order, the minister went to "O, very well," said our hero, "just walk up the hatter's and asked him how expensive a hat he could get up. A genuine beaver he was told would cost ten dollars. 'Get me ready such a one,' said the minister. In a few days the hat was ready, and in that time Mr. Arnold revived and got better. In short, the generous bachelor lived to see the bill presented for that hat, and learning the particulars from the hatter, he was so disgusted with the greed of the divine, that he added a codicil to his will, cutting off the legacy he had made him. Thus his price was cut down by the Justice to three | that hat cost the minister exactly one thousand dollars, for Mr. Arnold died within a month after-
